Eskimos build a house of ice- an igloo. Hard packed ice is cut into blocks which are then fitted together to form the domeshaped structures of the igloo. A hole is cut through the top to admit fresh air. Eskimos use oil lamps to keep their igloos warm. An igloo is comfortable because ice being a bad conductor of heat, does not allow any heat to escape and remains warm in spite of the outside temperature being as low as 35°C. Besides the concave inner surface of the igloo reflects back all the heat falling on it to the occupants of the igloo, keeping them warm.
